

You've Read This Before

by Dennis W. Montville

One of flayrod is, as has been seen in past episodes, completely off skew on treadle. This is by no means meant to indicate that things are not as they should be. On the contrary, normalcy has not proven to be a viable option in the pursuit of our objectives. Given the tendency of events to become counter productive, all manner of actions can be and have been known to become blatterfasted. This blatterfastification, and its associated nomerchantisms, often comes as a result of various combinations of pushing and side-slipping during stoofing of the dingers. Pushing of dingers, as I'm sure you've experienced, can cause skin eruptions and overall fatigue. However, giving in to these feelings of inadequacy and malice may invite success. This is to be avoided at all costs.

Conference of derivative and functional directives will promote early determination of suspected successful participants within the time-frame of our requirements. Nonconformance to early warning indicators seems to suggest that withdrawal to southern climates provides systemic relief of discomfort while costing many more doopas than previously indicated. Importation of additional supplies of doopas may provide a short-term remedy to this condition, but it should by no means become a standard approach to such oversights. This has been seen in the past and may be seen in the future, but tomorrow doesn't work right if the past determines our response to today's inputs.

Conditioning of the substrata can be done in several ways, but under no circumstances can it be delegated to individuals who were born after the third solstice of the fourth year of the fifth decade of the current millennium. Assignment of this to such persons could result in completion of the task and a missed opportunity to fail. As has been seen in the past, the future holds the best promise for what will come, be that as it may. However, trying only increases the chance not being able to try again if accomplishment disrupts the normal flow of events. This was clearly demonstrated in Davis vs. Whodafuk, and the lessons learned in that case shall never be so clear as now. Simply apply forward in a brushing pattern and feel clearly in the morning. I'm sure you know what I mean.

In conclusion, it is most certainly a problem when all possibilities are available for application to the current issues without proper authority. Circumventing the established conventions simply for the result of successful completion of the necessary tasks will embolden those who are charged with the responsibility of careful attention to detail and nuance during such tasks. This may allow superior performance to become a part of the daily record, disappointing those who have posted significant wagers against such results. In an effort to avoid disappointment in our customers and their relatives, all such misfortune in the direction of over-accomplishment should be referred to our resolution committee so that it can be ignored by the professionals that we have in place for just such events. Do not try to ignore such occurrences yourself as critical details may be reconciled. This will not be tolerated and will be dealt with in the harshest manner possible, which may include something that we forgot to do last week. We'll have to get back to you on that.